Great news! Texas House passes Religious Viewpoints Anti-Discrimination Act

Dear Peggy,

Thanks in part to your good actions, the Texas House of Representatives on Saturday passed the Religious Viewpoints Anti-discrimination Act (HB 3678), giving both schools and students guidelines to prevent violations of religious freedoms in public school. The bill received an overwhelming majority support by a vote of 107-28, after a successful motion to reconsider.

AFA worked closely with Kelly Coghlan, a Houston constitutional law attorney and one of the main advocates for the legislation. Kelly Coghlan said, "It will now be clear that Texas public schools are not anti-religion zones, school officials are not prayer police, and religious students are not enemies of the State. This bill does not require or suggest that any child express a religious viewpoint, it just protects them if they do. Religious children do not receive special rights, preferential treatment or extra protection, just equal rights, equal treatment and equal protection."
